
Description:

To coincide with the launch of the complete online archive this year, Nature has published an editorial collection looking back over its unique 138 year history.

Visit www.nature.com/nature/history [1] to read specially commissioned articles, use interactive timelines and watch video interviews with Nature's previous editors and science historians. You can even nominate and debate your favorite papers, letters and oddities. Visit the site and gain a novel insight into how Nature has both influenced and been influenced by some of the leading scientific minds and events in world history.

Nature's complete online archive launches this year and a special pre-launch price is available on site license access. The Nature archive: 1869-1949 is a one-time purchase and post-cancellation rights apply. Pricing is based on your institution type and size. Contact your sales representative, Villy Ioannou, for a tailored price quote today before pre-launch pricing expires.

Many libraries ordered the re-printed copy of the first issue of Nature earlier this year. If you missed your first issue and would like to sample the diverse and interesting content from the earliest issues, you can now start an online trial. Simply e-mail your representative for details: Villy Ioannou. We hope you find the History of the journal Nature website interesting, and that you don't miss this opportunity to add the final installment of the Nature archive to your libraries' collection and to save money with the pre-launch price.
