

The Library Hellanicus Institutional Repository is a service for depositing digital documents which are produced by the Institution's academic community as a result of its scientific and research activities and which, to a great extent, are not commercially available.

The main aim of the Hellanicus Institutional Repository is to collect, organize, publicize and maintain the scientific work of the members of the academic community in a way that ensures an easy and seamless access to it. Examples of this work include scientific articles - published or not - seminar lectures, textbooks, teaching material, dissertations and PhD theses, multimedia material and videotaped lectures.

The Hellanicus Institutional Repository was developed by the Library within the Act "Digital Library of the University of the Aegean" which was funded by the Operation of the "Digital Convergence" ERDF 2007-2013 programme.
